Bring Your Cadillac!

In 1902, Henry Leland was asked to help with the liquidation of the Detroit Motor Company. Instead, he suggested that the firm be reorganized to produce luxury automobiles. Ford, who was already envisioning the Model T, took his leave. Leland suggested naming the car after the founder of Detroit, Antoine de la Mothe Cadillac. The first Cadillac arrived in 1903 and was an immediate success, its price notwithstanding. By 1908, Cadillac had five luxury models in its portfolio, all with fully interchangeable parts. That was revolutionary. Making a deal with the Royal Automobile Club, Leland sent three Cadillacs to London for a demonstration during which they were completely disassembled, the parts mixed up, and the cars put back together. For this accomplishment, the RAC awarded Cadillac the Dewar Trophy for design excellence. The longtime Cadillac motto, "The Standard of the World," was thus born.

So You Want To Be A Judge? 1906 Cadillac Model H

If you ever want to be a Cadillac car judge at national meets, these are some of the details you might want to learn. If not, interesting history and information that you never know when you will need.

The Model H was the same as Model L except no limousine was offered. The Touring was a five-passenger. The Runabout and first production Cadillac Coupe offered. The wheelbase was 102 in., tires 32 x 4; rear springs 3/4 elliptic. Early ads, advance catalogs, and the 1906 ALAM Handbook listed the wheelbase of the Model H as 100 in. rather than the actual 102 in.

The price of the 2-door Touring was $2500; the Runabout was $2400; and the 2-door Coupe was $3000. Calendar/model year sales and production (1906-1908) was 509 units. The serial number was on a plate on the rear of the body or on the dash (with engine number). The engine number was stamped on the top surface of the crankcase -- in front of and to the left of the number one (front) cylinder. Engine No.: 10201-10709 (1906-1908).
